The Rising Cost of Stress

Up to 80% of financially distressed workers spend time at their place of employment worrying about personal finances and dealing with financial issues instead of working. Employees often admit that their concerns about personal finances interfere with their work....personal financial distress, therefore, negatively impacts employers.

Job stress costs the American industry alone $300 billion per year from factors like absenteeism and job turnover. More than half of the 550 million working days lost annually in the U.S. from absenteeism are stress related. Unanticipated absenteeism is estimated to cost American companies $602 per worker per year, and health care costs are nearly 50% higher for workers who report high stress levels.

Many employees may not recognize the degree to which their lack of financial wellness is contributing to their struggles. It's our goal to educate using techniques that foster behavior change, and give them real-world tools to take control of their finances. We do so in a non-solicitous, friendly manner that is accessible to all employees.

State-of-the-Art Customer Portal

Imagine a Financial Wellness company that is a hybrid with all of the state of the art technological efficiencies and advantages of the most sophisticated virtual financial companies, yet with the added advantages of not being virtual. That is The Belmont Franklin Group.
